Check Your Player's Hockey Helmet Expiration Date

The following is reprinted from the July 10th Edition of KVHA News

Kent Valley Ice Centre, Kent, WA. July 10, 2013 – KVHA members are advised to check out their hockey player's hockey helmet and make sure it has a HECC Certification sticker with an unexpired date. If not, the helmet needs to be replaced. Hockey helmets are generally certified for a life of about 6½ years. Most youth hockey players outgrow a helmet before its expiration date. Expired helmets should be replaced with a HECC certified helmet. Make sure the new helmet has the HECC certification sticker with an expiration date that is at least 5 years out.

KVHA coaches will be checking all players at the beginning of the 2013/2014 hockey season to make sure all helmets are in compliance. Officials will also be checking at game-time to make sure everyone is in compliance and prepared for safe play.

The photo on the left shows the placement of a typical HECC sticker as well as a close-up of the sticker.

For more information about HECC Certification and to view a video on how a helmet should be properly and safely fitted to your player's head, please visit this URL <http://www.hecc.net/>

If you have additional questions please contact Danny Lorenz, KVHA's Hockey Director.

Quote of the Day!

Celebrating with Stanley:

"Bringing the Cup back to Sweden was wonderful. To share it with so many people who came out to see it for a day was very special. The fans over there follow the NHL much more so today than we did when I was a kid growing up, which is great to see."

Peter Forsberg, Stanley Cup winner with Colorado 1996 and 2001
